An award-winning, essential source for Chicago women's history, Women Building Chicago 1790—1990 A Biographical Dictionary is unsurpassed as a scholarly reference on the city's history.

Published by Indiana University Press, the book contains the extensive biographies of 423 women that made notable impacts on labor, social reform, law, medicine, art, music, science, education, broadcasting, politics, philanthropy, religion, literature, the theater and many other areas. Many of these women have never been written about before.

“The goal of Women Building Chicago was to write a more inclusive history of Chicago, acknowledging the contributions of its female citizens of all races and ethnic groups.” Rima Schultz

Women Building Chicago sets a new standard for scholarly excellence with an in-depth introduction tracing women's role in the growth of the city, a comprehensive index, detailed source paragraphs at the end of each entry, photographs, and color plates of the work of women artists.
